

I believe that the FCC should not mandate that hardware manufacturers implement copy protection locks on their devices. The general public should be able to timeshift their shows if they so choose. The frequency spectrum is a public resource. Companies that use it are using a public resource. If they want to transmit their information in a way that inhibits the general public from using it in a proper manner, they should use other methods for transmitting it. i.e. Private options like Cable Companies and Satellite TV. Or, if they wanted to limit the amount of taping that goes on, they could make DVDs of show's easily available, in a timely manner.

Please don't inhibit the general public. This is a public resource and should be used for the public good, and with the public in mind.
Not just a select few businesses with lobbyists.

Thanks for your time,
